Creative arts enable students to become more confident in their individual abilities, collaborating as part in team work and find a way to express themselves emotionally.

Philosophy

Creative arts is a valuable part of children's school experience. In fact, it has been proven that whilst singing and making music together peoples serotonin levels and a number of other endorphins are raised leaving them with a sense of wellbeing. Playing music and singing together promotes children's feelings of belonging and can also give children a real sense of accomplishment and achievement when they share this with an audience. Making music arts participating in arts also helps give children a safe place in which to experience their emotions. It enables children to gain transferable skills like listening, following instructions turn taking, group work and performing. I feel that a shared musical experience can bring people together regardless of their background and strengths or weaknesses, it is a fantastic way to nurture positivity in children.

We are encouraging students to compose, perform and listen to music from many genres and also to be thinking about the purpose of music and arts in their day to day lives, the value of music and creativity and possible career and lifelong opportunities which it can present them with.
